

#iSPEAK: Rutgers Campus Climate Survey

Overview

The Center on Violence Against Women and Children (VAWC) at Rutgers University was identified by the White House Task Force to Protect Students from Sexual Assault to pilot a campus climate survey regarding sexual assault in the 2014-2015 academic year. The survey, based on an instrument recommended by the White House Task Force and tailored to the campus environment at Rutgers, was administered online with IRB approval between October 27, 2014 and November 9, 2014. A total of 11,735 students took the survey, representing a 28% response rate.

Process

It is important to note that the survey administration was only one part of the campus climate assessment process at Rutgers University. There was a great deal of preparation and planning prior to the implementation of the survey to build capacity and campus readiness. This included the creation of an Advisory Board, conducting a Resource Audit, working with the Institutional Review Board and the Office of Institutional Research and Academic Planning, meeting with campus leadership, and developing a comprehensive outreach plan with input from student, staff, and administrative leaders.

Additionally, the survey was tailored through multiple iterations to the Rutgers University-New Brunswick campus and its students in order to provide useful information that can be translated through meaningful analysis into recommendations for change. This process also involved eliminating a number of items from the White House-provided survey for length.

The Rutgers Campus Climate Assessment Conceptual Model (see fig. 1) outlines the process of conducting a campus climate survey, starting with capacity building, moving through the development and implementation of the survey, and ending with analysis and dissemination of findings. The process is an ongoing one, emphasizing continuous quality improvement. Our research team is pleased to share lessons learned with other colleges and universities. Importantly, we encourage these institutions to begin the campus climate assessment process by building capacity and establishing buy-in from the students, faculty and administration prior to the administration of the survey. Based on our experience, it is also essential to carefully adapt the survey to meet the context and needs of your particular campus. Lastly, planned outreach about the survey provides an opportunity for education about the issues and fosters a sense of ownership in the process. Our lessons learned are being thoroughly documented and are available on the VAWC Campus Climate Project website.

Survey Administration

For the pilot, all students, including graduate and undergraduate students, full-time and part-time students, and matriculated and non-matriculated students enrolled at Rutgers University-New Brunswick in the Fall 2014 semester were invited to complete the survey. Students were invited to complete the survey online using a computer or mobile device. Upon completing the survey, students were entered into a raffle for cash prizes. An initial e-mail invitation followed by three reminder e-mails provided students with the link to the online survey. Respondents were asked to log into the survey using their student identification numbers to allow for matching of demographic data and prevent students from taking the survey more than once. Once demographic data were matched with students' responses, the data file was anonymized so that it is impossible to link any individual student to his or her survey data.

Survey Instrument

The campus climate survey, branded at Rutgers as #iSPEAK, contains several scales that are widely used in research and data collection related to sexual violence. Much of the survey was drawn from the questionnaire recommended by the White House Task Force, with modifications made to suit the campus environment at Rutgers. These changes and additions were created with the input of an Advisory Board and informed by an extensive resource audit, during which the research team compiled a comprehensive list of policies, programs, and services addressing campus sexual assault. Modifications were also made based feedback from piloting the survey with students, consulting with experts in the field, and consulting the available literature.¹ Additionally, the research team shortened the survey to increase response rates. These changes are reflected in the survey instrument below. When applicable, citations are included throughout this copy of the survey referencing the original instruments from which scales or items are drawn.

The survey asks students to report on several aspects of their experience on campus, including their sense of community, their exposure to educational messages about sexual assault, and their opinions of the school's response to sexual violence. Students are also asked about experiences of sexual assault. These questions allow the research team to estimate the prevalence and incidence of campus sexual assault and better understand the circumstances under which sexual assault occurs. Skip logic is employed throughout the survey to ensure that respondents are only presented with the questions that are relevant to them.

It should be emphasized that the reliability, validity, and generalizability of the instrument presented below have not been determined. While it is based on the survey published by the White House Task Force, the survey, as presented in this document, should be seen as an untested pilot tool. Therefore, other institutions wishing to use this survey should be aware that the validity of the instrument as a whole has not yet been determined. Some of the scales are newly created by the Principal Investigator and research team and should be credited as such. As central functions of the pilot process, VAWC researchers will evaluate the performance of the survey's scales and items and recommend modifications.

More Information

The #iSPEAK survey is the centerpiece of a comprehensive campus climate assessment being conducted at Rutgers University-New Brunswick. Detailed procedures, which may be adapted to other campus environments, are presented in Understanding and Responding to Campus Sexual Assault: A Guide for Colleges and Universities. Upon completion of the survey pilot, once confident that the scales and items perform adequately, the research team will publish a revised instrument suitable for widespread use.
